stated that the U. S. Coast Survey other use. certained and its distance from the ernment. straight line has been measured. The old line was originally marked by stone posts, one of which was set at the end of each mile. The line of these monuments is south of the straight line throughout its whole length; at the two ends is departs slightly, but increases in distance every mile, and through all the middle part of the line, where for several miles it runs across the mountainous region of the State it is quite crooked. The greatest distance that the old line FURNITURE the twenty-sixth mile-stone, which is two thousand four hundred and fifteen feet off from the straight line. The straight line, as run this which we are enabled to offer at very year, was determined with instru-ments loaned to the Geological LOW PRICES. Survey by the U.S. Coast Survey The theodolite was an excellent one EXAMINE AND RECEIVE ESTIMATE. and very long sights could be taken with it. One was eighteen miles long, another was seventeen miles, and nearly all the sights were several miles in length, so that a great degree of accuracy was insured, and there is probably not a deviation of four feet in the whole distance. The old line was run with the surveyor's compass, and was run from both ends. In the best case this would have been a kind of rhumb line, but it was made still worse by the variation of the needle being different at the two ends, to the amount of about two degrees, and being less at one intermediate point than at either end. Local attraction in the mountainous region has helped too in making the line crooked. Of the fortyeight mile-stones originally set to engraved expressly for the work, at large expense mark the line, the places of seventeen cannot now be found. If these monuments had to be replaced, it NATIONAL PICTORIAL DICTIONARY would be impossible to locate them precisely in the same spot they formerly occupied, for the old ·line of monuments is crooked, curving mile-stones can be found, and in these the middle one varies from the straight line between the two end ones, by distances of seven, eight, nine, fourteen, eighteen, A twenty-one, twenty-seven, forty, fifty-three, one hundred and twenty-one, one hundred and fifty-two and two hundred and five feet respectively.

In reviewing this survey and considering its results, the following points stand out clearly as worthy of further attention:

1. The terminal monuments of the line, which are now plainly marked, should be permanently secured and legally protected. The western terminus, called Tri-states-

The eastern terminus, a heavy block of stone, known as the State-line rock, is on Prof. Cook, State Geologist, in his private property: a railroad has cupied by this old land-mark may "In the last annual report it was be needed by its owner for some
